Course Introduction

Climate change is no longer an environmental issue alone it is a global workforce transformation driver reshaping employment relations, labor rights, workplace safety, green jobs, and organizational sustainability strategies. Businesses, governments, and institutions are now required to integrate climate resilience, ESG compliance, carbon neutrality goals, and just transition frameworks into human resource and industrial relations systems. Climate Change and Employment Relations Training Course provides a comprehensive understanding of how climate change directly influences labor markets, employee relations, workplace policies, and sustainable development pathways.

The course bridges the gap between climate action and employment relations management, equipping participants with practical skills to manage green transitions, workforce adaptation, climate risk governance, and sustainable labor practices. It explores emerging global trends such as net-zero employment strategies, climate justice, green skills development, and socially responsible workforce transformation, ensuring organizations remain competitive, compliant, and future-ready in a rapidly evolving global economy.
