National Security Law and International Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC) Training Course

Professional Development Training Course Outline

Category	Defense and Security	Duration	5 Days
Base Fee	$1,500 USD	Delivery Mode	Online / On-site Hybrid

Course Introduction

National Security Law and the International Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC) are essential pillars in maintaining the balance between state security, military operations, and human rights protection. National Security Law and International Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC) Training Course provides a comprehensive overview of legal frameworks governing national defense, counterterrorism, cyber operations, intelligence, and military engagements, emphasizing the intersection of domestic legislation and international obligations. Participants will gain advanced understanding of state authority, the scope of powers under national security law, and the rules of armed conflict, including the conduct of hostilities, protection of civilians, treatment of detainees, and lawful targeting principles. Through case studies and real-world applications, learners will enhance their capability to operate within legal boundaries while ensuring operational effectiveness and accountability.

The training explores contemporary challenges in implementing LOAC principles, addressing hybrid warfare, cyber operations, and emerging security threats. Participants will examine obligations under the Geneva Conventions, customary international law, and human rights treaties while understanding the implications of national security policies on operational planning and decision-making. By integrating theory, legal analysis, and practical exercises, the course equips security professionals, military officers, legal advisors, and policymakers with the tools to navigate complex legal environments, mitigate risks, and uphold ethical standards during armed operations and national security initiatives.
