

The Role of Regional Economic Communities in Migration Governance Training Course

Professional Development Training Course Outline

Category	Migration and Refugee	Duration	10 Days
Base Fee	$3,000 USD	Delivery Mode	Online / On-site Hybrid

Course Introduction

Regional Economic Communities (RECs) play a critical role in shaping migration governance frameworks across Africa. Effective management of migration flows, labor mobility, and border regulation requires an understanding of both regional integration policies and international migration standards. The Role of Regional Economic Communities in Migration Governance Training Course explores the mechanisms, strategies, and collaborative efforts of RECs in promoting safe, orderly, and regular migration. Participants will gain practical insights into the policy, legal, and institutional frameworks that guide migration governance within regional contexts.

The training focuses on equipping policymakers, migration practitioners, and stakeholders with the knowledge and tools necessary to enhance regional cooperation, strengthen border management, and align migration governance with sustainable development goals. By examining case studies, participants will learn best practices and innovative approaches to addressing migration challenges, enhancing socio-economic benefits, and ensuring protection for migrants across RECs.
